

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An ion-implantation machine has an implantation chamber with a vent inlet; a vacuum pump is connected to the implantation chamber through a vacuum valve. A pipe connects the vent inlet of the implantation chamber to a source of a fluid containing oxygen. The fluid containing oxygen is preferably environmental air. A flow-rate control valve is arranged on the pipe and is activated only after closing the vacuum valve.

854063.730 / 410023_1.DOC